My way to a good day...

It is not uncommon to hear people say to think of the child on their "worst day" and this can feel quite uncomfortable and very deficit-minded. The purpose of this, however, is to be able to establish what happens when the child is not adequately supported. Always begin thinking about the child's best days and then consider what puts this at risk.

What does a good day look like?

What makes it a good day?

what risks are there that stop it from being a good day?
